A Little Guide to Estonian Superstitions

Superstitions are as varied across the world as culinary delights. Discovering those of different countries is always an amusing, if not delicious, experience. Estonia is no exception. While sharing several beliefs with neighboring Latvia and Lithuania, it has its unique customs that one might marvel at or even adopt, should they bring good fortune...

In Tallinn, if you drop a knife, it signals a male visitor will soon arrive. It's customary not to shake his hand over the threshold to avoid bad luck. One should also avoid placing bags directly on the ground, as it symbolizes imminent monetary loss.

Marriage is a crucial subject of numerous superstitions. A child born on the last day of the week is believed to marry late or perhaps not at all. Dropping a piece of cake while eating portends that you may never marry. Once successfully wedded, upon entering their new home, the bride should walk through all the rooms, throwing either ribbons or coins to ensure marital bliss.

Finally, here's a fun one to try with a friend: when two people say the same thing simultaneously, they must make a wish, then link pinkies and count aloud to three. After that, they say either "Adomas" or "Iewa" which means Adam and Eve respectively. If both people say the same word, it's believed that the wish will come true.

SIGHTS

- St Catherine's Passage (Katariina Kaik)

- Kiek in de Kōk

SHOPPING AND CUISINE

The most unique Estonian souvenirs are traditional Estonian handicrafts: knitwear, linen, ceramics, leather, and wood, especially juniper wood. Most of Estonian design can be seen in small galleries, design boutiques and fashion stores.

Tuljak has a long history. The restaurant building itself is a good example of modern Estonian architecture from 1964. During the Soviet era, Tuljak cafe served the people of Tallinn.
