Fancy a tea in Boston?

Boston is one of the oldest cities in the United States, but it is also the birthplace of the Revolutionary War. One event in particular left its mark on history: the Boston Tea Party. The year was 1773, and Great Britain was ruling its American colonies with an iron fist in a steel glove, increasingly taxing its subjects across the Atlantic. A situation that was growing harsher and harsher for the American colonists. In May, the Tea Act was passed. It exempted the British East India Company alone from all taxes on the sale of tea in the American colonies, creating a de facto monopoly in North America. Worried that free competition on other products would come to an end, colonists and importers banded together. On 16 December 1773, ships from the British East India Company docked in Boston harbour. They were stormed by colonists disguised as Mohawk Indians and their cargo of tea was thrown overboard. 350 crates were left to brew in the waters of Boston harbour as a message of discontent to King George III. In retaliation, the King of England took sanctuary against the colony of Massachusetts by enacting highly penalising laws, demanding repayment for the lost tea chests and closing the port of Boston. This response prompted all the colonies to join forces behind Massachusetts, leading a few years later to the Declaration of Independence of the thirteen North American colonies.

ACORN STREET

Acorn Street in Boston is a charming cobblestone lane nestled in the historic Beacon Hill neighborhood. This picturesque street is renowned for being one of the most photographed in the United States, and for good reason. Its beautifully preserved Federal-style row houses, adorned with colorful doors, vibrant floral window boxes, and antique street lamps, transport visitors back in time.
