BROOME, AUSTRALIA

The gateway to the further adventure in the Kimberley Region

Gateway to the oldest and most elusive of all Australia's nine regions, Broome is where your Kimberley adventure begins. The ancient landscape has long held travellers spellbound: the Kimberley is three times larger than England but has a population of just 35,000, is over 65,000 years old, and is home to 2,000 km of coastline. Almost impenetrable and incredibly remote, its red baked earth, prolific wildlife, majestic canyons, and swimming holes are the stuff of Australian wilderness dreams.

English explorer William Dampier was the first European to set foot in Broome in 1688. However, the land had long been used as a trading route between the east and west Kimberley by Aboriginal families. These semi-nomadic tribes respected strict unwritten rules regarding ownership of the land. The Yawuru people remain the Native Title holders for the township of Broome to this day. Broome itself has over 84 Aboriginal communities affiliated with it, 78 of which are considered remote.

The city grew from its nascent pearling industry in the late 19th century. Pearl diving in the waters surrounding Broome was dangerous, and for many years divers were limited to Aboriginal slaves—skin divers who faced cyclones, sharks, crocodiles, and severe ear and chest infections in order to bring up as many pearl shells as possible for their masters. Natural pearls were rare and extremely valuable, and when found, were placed in a locked box. At the peak of the industry, around 1914, Broome was responsible for 80% of the world's pearl trade.

MALCOLM DOUGLAS WILDERNESS PARK

Cuddle a baby crocodile, see the rare cassowary, or pat a kangaroo. At the Malcolm Douglas Wilderness Wildlife Park, about a 15-minute drive from Broome, animal lovers can enjoy close-up views of some of Australia's quirkiest and most formidable creatures and learn about their habitat and behaviors. Wallabies, dingoes, snakes, and lizards also inhabit the park, as well as a range of feathered critters, from emus to cockatoos and kookaburras. Stay for the croc feeding, when some of the largest crocodiles in Australia demonstrate their surprising agility as they lunge for food.

SILVERSEA EXPEDITIONS - Above the Expected, Beyond the Extraordinary

There is no place on Earth like the Kimberley coast; it tops travel lists time and time again with good reason. The Kimberley is wild and remote with a storied history, and it is untouched by humans other than the ancient Indigenous engravings you'll find on the walls of the caves. Almost impenetrable, the landscape consists of sparkling horizontal waterfalls, gorges, canyons, ridges, ancient mangrove forests and cliffs. No two journeys here are the same, you might see a humpback whale or a saltwater crocodile while exploring the waters, but you won't spot any humans.
