PORT ELIZABETH (GOEBERHA), SOUTH AFRICA

A Xhosa tale

Port Elizabeth is located in the homeland of the Xhosa people, the ethnic group from which Nelson Mandela hails. In Xhosa culture, oral tradition and storytelling play a significant role, with the tale of Qamata being one of the most prominent. Qamata is regarded as the primary deity responsible for the creation of the world and this story is not only a fundamental aspect of the Xhosa creation myth but also highlights the deep connection the people have with their land and the natural world, showcasing the complexity of Xhosa cosmology.

According to legend, Qamata was one of the first two beings to exist, born from the primordial forces of the sky and the earth. Entrusted with the task of shaping the earth, Qamata faced a formidable opponent in Nkanyamba, a sea dragon and the nemesis of his mother.

In one of their intense confrontations, Nkanyamba inflicted a grave injury on Qamata, hindering his ability to create dry land amidst the endless ocean. In response, the Earth goddess, his mother, intervened by casting large cattle made from reeds into the waters. These cattle miraculously transformed into landmasses, giving rise to the continents.

Initially, these new lands were lifeless and barren. To remedy this, the Earth goddess began to populate them with life. However, each night, Nkanyamba would drag the lands back beneath the waves, erasing the creations of the Earth goddess.

To thwart this cycle, she fashioned four celestial beings from her own essence, who became the guardians of the earth. These demi-gods assisted Qamata in his struggle against Nkanyamba, ultimately driving him deep into the ocean. This victory allowed life to thrive without further interference.
